Ethan Roh was a high-flying, self-serving lawyer—until a near-death experience forces him to face a world he never knew existed. Now, thanks to a sardonic Mr. Death, Ethan is bound by a 180-day contract: Help restless spirits resolve the injustices that robbed them of peace or die.

At first, his cases are minor annoyances: a workplace accident here, a wage theft there, a wrongfully fired ghost moaning over paperwork—but even small victories teach him the rules of this ghostly game. With the irreverent, tech-savvy Daniel Lee by his side, Ethan uncovers hidden digital breadcrumbs that connect the living and the dead, sometimes with hilarious and chaotic results.

Enter Claire Kim, his ex-wife and moral compass, who keeps Ethan grounded with a mix of tough love and righteous indignation. “Justice isn’t a contract, Ethan—it’s a responsibility,” she reminds him, often at the exact moment he’s about to make things worse.

As the cases escalate—from quirky office hauntings to high-stakes corporate and political intrigue—Ethan must navigate legal loopholes, temperamental spirits, and the occasional viral social media fiasco. The season builds to a jaw-dropping courtroom showdown with Kane Industries, forcing Ethan to confront his past, rethink what justice really means, and transform from a self-serving shark into a true advocate for the dead... all while trying not to become the next ghost on the docket.
